UX Design and Prototyping for Educators on the Adobe Education Exchange

This certificate is presented in recognition of participation in and completion of the UX Design and Prototyping for Educators on the Adobe Education Exchange course, a 5 week course, which ran from August 6 to September 21, 2018: <https://edex.adobe.com/pd/course/5UXdesign18>

The UX Design and Prototyping for Educators on the Adobe Education Exchange course requires around 25 hours of work to complete and requires the participant to successfully complete 5 assignments as well as comment and rate peer work each week and complete a learning journal which can be found here:

This course explores the principles of UX and UI design and prototyping and how to use Adobe creative tools to create engaging and useful mobile app design. Then learn how to apply your new digital skills to teach UX and UI design and to integrate new projects into your curriculum. Understanding UX and UI design helps students to better communicate ideas, emotion, and purpose through effective mobile apps. Develop your skills with Adobe XD, an industry standard UX/UI design tool, and learn how to teach your students the design and technical skills they need to effectively use UX and UI design in digital media projects.

Learning Objectives

- How using UX and UI design and prototyping in your curriculum can produce positive outcomes for you and your students
- Best practices and principles of UX and UI design
- The technical skills to create your own mobile app designs and prototypes with Adobe tools (with support from expert digital media educators)
- How to apply your new skills to integrate UX design and prototyping projects into your curriculum
- Collaborate with educators from around the world
